The Mystery of Hanukkah Harry

Join Joshua Finkelstein and his best friend Danny as they go on a quest for the identity of the mysterious Hanukkah Harry. They'll ask for help from the audience as they try to sort out the clues they get from their family and community. Their shenanigans will have the whole audience laughing, yet the show also contains an important lesson about the essence of Hanukkah. As Josh and Danny discover, Hanukkah Harry doesn't deliver presents; he is alive in anyone who stands up for him or herself and creates a miracle for the people he or she loves. A family show for all ages.

Bio

Talking Hands Theatre is a Massachusetts-based company committed to entertaining children with puppets by engaging their minds and their imaginations as well as their senses of humor. We perform in schools, libraries, day care centers, parks, theatres, hospitals, and homes throughout New England. Our 5' wide black curtain stage fits easily in any space. We bring all our own sound equipment. The puppets are all handmade rod, hand, and tabletop puppets. All shows include an interactive element.

Past venues include The Springfield Museums, The Springfield Jewish Community Center, The JCC of Greater Boston, The 92nd Street Y, The Jewish Museum, The Brooklyn Children's Museum, The Peter Jay Sharp Children's Glade of Central Park, Goldman Sachs, and over forty branches of the New York Public Library. Director Anna Sobel has been a professional puppeteer since 1998. She was employed as a puppeteer for Kids on the Block for three years and Blue Sky Puppet Theatre for two years. In 2003 she was the recipient of a Fulbright Fellowship to study puppetry in India as a tool for social change and education. She founded Talking Hands Theatre on her return to New York in 2004. In addition to performing, Sobel worked as a teaching artist in public schools all over New York through Shadowbox Theatre and Brooklyn Arts Council. In 2008 she was honored as the Laura Adasko Lenzner artist in residence at the Bank Street School for Children. After completing her BA at Wesleyan University, she went on to study literacy and early childhood education at Bank Street College and now also holds a master's degree in educational theatre from N.Y.U. After six busy years in the city, she moved her company to Western Massachusetts and is now based in Shutesbury, MA.
